What is the best free gif app

iOS, Android: You have a few options if you're looking to superimpose your face (or your friends' faces) on the next big meme. You can go the South Park treatment, where you slap an oversized cutout of your own head over the head of whoever is in the GIF you're trying to mess with. That's easy, even though it looks a little crude.I've also been playing around with the Morphin app for iOS and Android, currently in beta. Instead of going the your-face-pasted-over-their-face approach, it transforms the entire GIF into a CGI scene, inserting your head (or the head of anyone in your photo library) in place of whoever is in the GIF. The results, while also a little crude, are still funny.The app itself couldn't be any easier to use. You'll have to create an account before you can get started creating GIF scenes, but I do appreciate the creativity of Morphin's tutorial, which simulates a chat thread between you and the app.Screenshot: David MurphyYou'll take a quick selfie of your face and pick a .GIF to emulate. Morphin will get started creating the CGI scene, giving you a little trivia to play while you wait for the process to finish—typically less than ten seconds.Screenshot: David MurphyFrom there, you can save the .GIF the app creates to your photo library or share it with other services. The latter didn't work for me very well, but I'll chalk that up to the app still being a little buggy. It's weird that you have to share at least three GIFs before you can partake in the full Morphin library of GIFs, but I'm hopeful the app will fix that weird limitation in future updates. (I got past it by just making and saving three GIFs. Easy.)To Morphin's credit, they do have a pretty decent list of popular GIFs to pick from—at least, I've always wanted to be Khaleesi.Screenshot: David MurphyAnd I appreciate that you don't even have to use your own face if you don't want to. You can pull in the face of anyone in your photo library; even stranger, Morphin gives you a pre-populated selection of celebrity faces you can use. That way, you can pull a Benioff & Weiss and really mess with the ending of Game of Thrones: Image credit: Thomas Niedemueller/GettyEveryone's using the same app to check Facebook, send tweets, or take pictures. Boring. This App is Fire is here to take a look at some of the best hidden gems in every app store you can find, from much-needed utilities and services to polished productivity tools. Think killer apps, but with less murderous intent. Got a fire app? Send an email to patrick.austin@liferhacker.com and let me know why it's your app of choice.iOS: Making GIFs yourself has always been a pretty involved process either made too simple to suit my desires or too complicated to be intuitive. GIF Toaster blends the best of both worlds, offering more than enough control over the GIFs you're trying to create in an interface that's simple to use and unobscured by ads (if you pay). It's a must have app on your iOS device and has been praised by users familiar with the apps available for GIF-building. If you ever want to make a GIF with some pro-level tools, or desire more flexibility to customize your creation just the way you want it, GIF Toaster is a more than capable tool.How to Make a GIFGIF Toaster shows you a list of available photos and videos you can use to make GIFs, along with conversion options for different media types like burst shots, live photos, timelapses, and panoramic shots. You can convert your Animoji videos as well if your mug looks particularly funny as a talking dog. It only works with files you've got on your iOS device, so no dropping in YouTube links to make clips (use Giphy's web tool or Mac app for that).Choose your photos or video, hit next, and use the editor to customize your GIF. You can clip the video's length, choose the frame rate, adjust GIF speed, alter the playback direction, crop the frame, and rotate the video either horizontally or vertically. There are also filters and text banners you can add should you want to put some more flair on your creation.You can even select GIFs already on your device and convert them into videos, still photos, videos, or live photos. What's more, after you create a GIF, you can see all the relevant stats like framerate, length, file size, and total frames when you check the info tab.If you need to share what's on your device's screen, GIF Toaster makes it easy to transform that long recording showing off your skills in Angry Birds 2 into into a short, sweet image that won't take hours to send compared to its video source material.GIF Toaster is free to use, but paying the $1.99 in-app purchase not only gets rid of the annoying ad at the bottom of the app, but adds features like GIF collage creation, GIF creation with unlimited resolution, and an unlimited number of GIF albums to keep your creations organized. If you want to add weird stickers and overlays to your GIFs, there are other apps available for your customizing pleasure (consider Giphy, which makes it easy to add hilarious props to your animated creations), but GIF Toaster is by far the most easy to use GIF creation tool I've stumbled across, and features more than enough functionality to be my main GIF tool of choice. what is the best free gif app for iphone. is there a free gif app. what is the best app for gifs
